A. Lytle to my open letter addressed to the people of Lincoln county in the isene of the INTERIOR JOURNAL of the 30th ult. He predicates the accessity of a response upon an apprehension that those who do not know him might construe his silence into an admission of the charges I have brought against him; from which it appears that he is only solicitous in respect of the opinions of strangers, and totally indifferent as to the conclusions the people of his own county may form. He is surely ton modest to intimate that his reputation is so immaculate that it caunot be affected by anything I may say, supported as I am by the record of his own court.

A SCRAP OF RISTORY.

Eclipses, comets, and estrappilnarily high tides can be predicted with ac curacy; there even seems to be a probability that in time the weather will also strike its flag to science, and that means will be found of disentangling the con-flicting influences which sends an aneroid up and down. But in the art of foretelling the probable current of public enthusiasm there is no sign of progress. The keenent observer of human nature can no more guess whether the career of any particular suitor, warrior, explorer, or eriminal will simply appear in the newspapers and excite no more attention, or will be generally taken up as a matter of Importance than the purrest typo can. It was more than a million to one that Robert Jeffrey's wrongs would remain unnoticed, or raise but a feeble and passing interest. He became a popular idol, however—a representative victim of the press-gang system, and thr tyrannical customs which naturally grow out of it, and so n very curious story has

Nelson was fitted at Polperro in Corn-Netson was hitted at Polyerro in Corn-wall, a place famous for its hardy race of smugglers, the entire population being hrought up to look upon coast guards-nen as natural enemics, who might be killed with as good conscience as though they were Frenchmen. The profits of rivateering were often greater even than those of smuggling, and the Lord Nelson had no difficulty in gathering to-gether a first-rate erew. Amongst them was a man who had been brought up as a black-mith, but had found both excitement and profit in an occasional seu trip, and indeed was as good at the tiller as at the forge, perhaps a trifle better. The name of this amphiblous Cornishman was Robert Jeffrey, and his career as a privateersman was a short one; tor the Lord Nelson, at the very commencement of her cruise, was forced to put into Falmouth, where she was boarded by a preasgang. It was a perfectly illegal proceeding; the press-gang had no more house and take the plate-basket. But at the commencement of this century private rights were very little respected where the public service was concerned unless the person whom it was proposed to injure had plenty of monry or political influence. Robert Jeffrey had neither, and he was carried on H. M. S. Recruit, and converted into a man-of-war's man quite against his will, and in defiance of his clear and undoubted protection.

The commander of the Recruit was a passionate man, the folbles of whose nawas now seat in cruise in the Carribbean

He fully believed that the captain unly meant to frighten him, and bore up pretty well through the night with that hlea. But when the morning dawned the Recruit was a more speek lu the distance, which slowly passed away beyond the horizon. Then the unhappy man realized that he was a castaway. The Recruit, Indeed, had caught a tavoring breeze, which carried her quickly to Barbadoes, where she joined the squadron under Admiral Sir Alexander Cochrane. Here officers and rrew, mingled with other ships, spoke freely of the affair, which presently reached the admiral's rars, who sent for the captain, questioned him, and finding the story true, severely reprimanded him for his brutality, and ordered him back to rescue the man.

The island upon which Jeffrey had been so barbarously left was one of the Leeward group, a desolate rock called Sombrero, and the Recruit got back to it dow.
